Yesterday quite a number of gentlemen visited the office of Col. R. F. Looney, in the Masonic Temple, to witness a test of a new telephone, the property of the Pan Electric Company, of Washington, D. C., represented here by Col. Looney. The inventor of the instrument is J. Harris Rogers, of Washington, a son of the Rev. Dr. Rogers, formerly of this city, and the officers of the company having it in charge are Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, president: Senator Isham G. Harris, vice-president: Senator Isham G. The spring, mounted with carbon, as employed in the tele phones now in use, it was said, was liabl to cause rapid vibrations and a break in the circuit, disturbing the conversation if the talk was loud. The arrangement of the talk was loud. The arrangement of the new transmitter, it was said, depended simply on a carbon button or plate, under which the voice passed, moving it up at each amplitude and allowing it to return to its normal condition by gravity, a small globule of mercury being placed in the button connecting the circuit of the wire with the carbon plate. A horseshoe mag-net it was said was also wound on one
